

Confusing accounts software is forcing business owners and managers to make vital decisions without the right data.

That's according to Mark Robinson of Northampton-based Bean Accounting. He says most firms that use traditional accounting software are never really on top of their financial situation.

So Mark's launched a revolutionary new online accounts package at www.BeanAccounting.co.uk.

There's no software at all. Instead, businesses simply and securely enter basic transactions online, 24 hours a day. They can then get up-to-date accurate data out of the system as they need it – including important information such as monies owed and their current financial position.

They also have a qualified accountant dealing with their accounts regularly over 12 months, making both VAT returns and year end quick and simple processes... and actually more cost effective.

Mark believes it will ultimately change the way all small and medium-sized businesses look after their finances.

He said: "Over the years I've watched so many smart business people struggle with the traditional software. It's not user friendly in any way, and it's hard to get out the data you really need. You shouldn't have to make important decisions on information that's a month out of date."

Mark added: "BeanAccounting has been built from scratch to actually help businesses use financial information to make important decisions, rather than hinder them!"
